Web helping Singaporean baby get surgery in Boston

Lifesavers. In three weeks, Indiegogo Life and GIVEasia campaigns have raised more than $350,000 of the needed $1.3 million for a rare procedure.

Mother and baby / PROVIDED

The struggle began for baby Yujia the day she was born, one month early in a Singaporean hospital.

Her kidney was small and her heart pocked with holes. A blood clot found in her brain signaled she might later suffer seizures. Most pressing, though, a birth defect meant the infant's esophagus did not connect properly with her stomach, a condition called Esophageal Atresia, which in its various forms impacts about 1 in 4,000 newborns, according to the National Library of Medicine.

After nearly two years of hospital stays and surgeries, 21-month-old Yujia is still not well, said her mom Jamie Yun. Seeking the safest and most effective treatment, Yun said she needs to bring Yujia to the world-renowned EA program at Boston Children's Hospital. The price tag: $1.3 million.

When a Boston doctor delivered the news of how much surgery and a six-month stay would cost, Yun said, "My heart sank. ... I gave up on the spot."

So three weeks ago, Yun asked the world for help, launching a crowdfunding campaign on Indiegogo Life, which so far has raised close to $150,000. Another fundraiser on a Singapore-based site called GIVEasia has raised an additional $215,000.

Six weeks of fundraising remain, and it appears the Yun family is approaching its goal.

"We never thought the response would be that overwhelming," Yun said. "I just wanted to share our story to as many people as we could."

Yun is not alone in asking the Internet for help paying medical bills.

Fundraisers for medical treatments are among the most popular on Indiegogo Life — the site's branch that focuses on fundraising for personal needs or causes — said spokeswoman Elena Ginebreda-Frendel.

"Medical fundraisers do extremely well," Ginebreda-Frendel said. "The most successful campaigns include an authentic, personal story to explain the impact the funds will have. When people have something personal to connect with, they are more likely to donate."

Perhaps the fundraiser's nearly 2,000 donors were wooed by a video attached to the campaign, a tear-jerking chronicle of the pudgy and adorable Yujia's challenging infancy, her tiny body so often crisscrossed with tubes and surrounded by medical equipment.

Feeding Yujia through a tube inserted in her stomach, and clearing excess saliva from her mouth once every two hours to keep her from choking, have become rituals, Yun said last week via Skype. In the background, a very drowsy Yujia — stable for then — lounged in her father Wenlong's arms.

Yujia has also suffered a number of other maladies, Yun said — among them a retinal detachment in her right eye, which required surgery. She said doctors do not know how much of her vision Yujia will recover.

Attempts to reconnect Yujia's esophagus in Singapore have been unsuccessful, she said. After the latest round of treatment, she said, the child's esophagus tore and her lungs collapsed. To recover, Yujia spent 43 days in an intensive care unit.

Yun said she wants her child to live her life as comfortably as possible, and is determined to help baby Yujia enter childhood eating by mouth, not through a tube.

"The goal is to end the misery," Yun said.

The hospital

Why Children's?

The Esophageal Atresia Treatment Program at Boston Children's Hospital, led by Dr. Russell Jennings, is the only one in the world offering a special treatment to reconnect stomach and esophagus tissue called the Foker Process. Dr. John Foker, a surgeon from the University of Minnesota developed the process, by which tissue is stimulated to grow into a healthy, properly attached organ. Foker collaborated with Children's Hospital to found the program.

While effective, the Foker Process is not practiced worldwide because it is too challenging a feat for most hospitals, Jennings said. Not so for Children's, he said.

"These are the most challenging cases faced by pediatric surgeons, no question," Jennings said in a 2011 YouTube video. "We are arguably the best children's hospital in the world. We have everything. If we don't do this, this technique dies. And that means all these kids from around the world will not get treated, or will not get treated with the best care possible."

From a mother

Jamie Yun's message to supporters

"I'm ashamed I couldn't meet them face-to-face and tell them how thankful I am for every donation or contribution. It means so much to us.

"Even though it's difficult to raise that amount, every cent counts.

"I'm really thankful for every single donation contributed to baby Yujia.

"Even though we never met, I would like to say we are very grateful.

"Without your support we probably wouldn't have had the chance to solve this issue. You're a lifesaver."

What they all have in common: A love of food

Incubator. Commonwealth Kitchen provides food entrepreneurs with a home in Jamaica Plain.

Owner of Paleo Life, Mike Morrison prepares meals for his clients at Commonwealth Kitchen in Boston on Sunday. / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

Massachusetts history and the history of food are intricately linked. From Boston baked beans to Toll House cookies and Fig Newtons to Parker House rolls, many of the country's favorites came from our kitchens.

As the food industry became more industrialized, many independent manufacturers were squeezed out. Now, one of their former factories has been repurposed for the meal-minded masses.

Having outgrown their original home in Jamaica Plain, Commonwealth Kitchen has expanded its food business incubator into the 36,000-square-foot former home of Bornstein & Pearl Provision Co. (creator of those amazing hot dogs that are another Boston-born classic). On July 11, they will be hosting a food festival at their Dorchester location.

Overseen by longtime Community Servings chef Brad Stevens and veteran not-for-profit pro Jen Faigel, the facility hosts some of the area's most popular up-and-coming establishments and those who are about to be.

"Over the past two years, we've tripled our kitchen space, and grown from a budget of $300,000 in 2013 to $1.3 million," Faigel said.

Among the kitchen's members are Clover Food Lab, McCrea's Candies, Roxy's Grilled Cheese, BATCH Ice Cream (one of former Mayor Thomas Menino's favorites), Boston Police's Lyndigo Spice and the Bayou-bred NOLA's Fresh Foods.

In addition to being an incubator for fledgling chefs, the kitchen is also a test site for the commonwealth's composting pilot, a warehouse and a space where people can share expenses and ideas.

"I have access to mixers that are nearly 20 times the size mixer I have at home," said Heather of Top Shelf Cookies, noting that the kitchen oven can bake 700 cookies at a time. "That's equipment I couldn't have afforded on my own."

Get ready. More sharks are coming this way

Welcome to shark season. The predatory fish have been making headlines over the last few weeks as summer kicks off.

Last week, we met "Freckles," the first great white caught on camera at the Cape for summer 2015 by the Atlantic White Shark Conservancy.

Freckles is the first of many sharks the area will see, biologist Greg Skomal told Metro.

There were 68 individual shark sightings reported statewide last year, Skomal said, and "we are likely to see similar numbers this summer."

South of Boston, meanwhile, this weekend saw the sixth person in one month to have been bitten by a shark in the waters off North Carolina.

Boat captain Greg Sears of Mass Bay Guides offered beachgoers and boaters some words of wisdom for this season: "Sharks' brains are about the size of your thumbnail and they've got two things on their mind, and that's to eat and breed. They're not here to breed." SPENCER BUELL

Second fugitive nabbed

Captured. David Sweat, one of the two men to escape from an upstate prison earlier this month, has been caught alive.

David Sweat, one of two New York state inmates who escaped from prison three weeks ago, was shot by police near the Canadian border and rushed to a local hospital on Sunday, two days after his accomplice was killed, authorities said.

His capture was the dramatic climax of a massive manhunt for Sweat and his fellow inmate Richard Matt, who were discovered missing from the Clinton Correctional Facility in Dannemora, New York, on June 6. Some 1,300 members of law enforcement took part in the search through the forests and bogs of northern New York.

Sweat, 35, was shot and taken into custody in the town of Constable, 23 miles north of Duane, where his accomplice was shot and killed on Friday, New York State Police said in a statement. Constable is just 5 miles south of the Canadian border.

Sergeant Jay Cook of the New York State Police spotted "a suspicious man walking down a roadway" at about 3:20 p.m. According to officials, he called to and engaged the man, recognized him as Sweat and ran after him. As Sweat ran close to the treeline, Cook shot him twice in the torso.

Sweat was taken into custody alive, and then taken to a local hospital for treatment.

Authorities reported him in stable condition at a news conference Sunday evening, and said he would be transported to a trauma center.

"I think a lot of people are going to rest easier tonight," said Jessica Randall, 38, of Malone, who was shopping with her husband when she saw a convoy of police vehicles speed by.

Capturing the suspect alive would enable New York state prison authorities to learn more about how the pair managed to break out and use that information to tighten security.

In their audacious breakout, the pair cut through cell walls, climbed along a catwalk, shimmied through a steam pipe and emerged from a manhole outside prison walls, authorities said. REUTERS

Six things you need to know

1 SpaceX rocket explodes after Florida launch

An unmanned Space Exploration Technologies rocket exploded about two minutes after liftoff from Florida on Sunday, destroying a cargo ship bound for the International Space Station in the latest in a string of mishaps in supplying the orbiting outpost.

The 208-foot-tall Falcon 9 rocket, built and flown by the company known as SpaceX that is owned by technology entrepreneur Elon Musk, had previously made 18 successful launches since its 2010 debut. Those included six cargo runs for NASA under a 15-flight contract worth more than $2 billion.

The accident soon after liftoff from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station was the second successive botched mission to resupply the space station. A Russian Progress cargo ship failed to reach the outpost in April following a problem with its Soyuz launcher. REUTERS

2 Boy Scout killed in flooding at New Mexico ranch

A Boy Scout was killed when a flash flood triggered by heavy rains swept through a canyon on a New Mexico ranch where he was camping, authorities said on Sunday.

The scout was discovered missing on Saturday morning and later discovered dead, according to a statement issued by the Philmont Scout Ranch.

A flash flood swept through a canyon on the ranch at about 4:30 a.m. local time where a group of 12 scouts and leaders was camping, according to local television station KOB-TV. REUTERS

3 One injured when shots fired at San Francisco's gay pride festival

A spectator was shot in the arm after a dispute at San Francisco's annual gay pride festival escalated into gunfire on Saturday, police said.

Police responded to reports of gunshots in the United Nations Plaza area of downtown San Francisco as the first day of the city's two-day gay pride celebration was winding down.

"The incident is believed to have started when several groups of men, unrelated to the PRIDE event, got in a verbal argument near or inside the venue," San Francisco Police said. REUTERS

4 Missouri stunt pilot killed in air show crash

A pilot was killed when his biplane crashed while he was performing stunts in front of a crowd at a Missouri air show on Saturday, police said on Sunday.

Steven O'Berg, 50, crashed shortly before 2 p.m. on Saturday in Cameron, Missouri, according to a news release from Cameron Police Chief Rick Bashor.

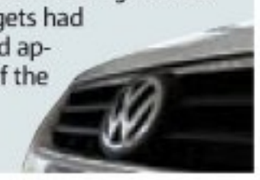
O'Berg flew in a Pitts S-28 biplane capable of vertical maneuvers, and featuring a loud exhaust and a propeller tone that was popular with audiences, according to a description on the Cameron Airshow website. O'Berg lived in Smithville, Missouri, near Cameron, Bashor said. REUTERS

5 Volkswagen to launch budget cars in 2018

Germany's Volkswagen plans to launch a family of low-cost budget cars in China and possibly elsewhere starting in 2018, its chief executive said in a newspaper interview on Sunday.

"We will bring a budget-car family to market in 2018, with an SUV, saloon and hatchback," Martin Winterkorn told Bild am Sonntag newspaper.

Europe's largest automaker had for years been pondering a budget car but difficulties in hitting internal cost targets had thwarted approval of the project. REUTERS



6 France attack suspect admits killing manager

French police escort Yassin Salhi as they leave his flat in Saint-Priest. The suspected Islamist who attempted to blow up a French chemical plant on Friday has admitted killing his manager beforehand, a source close to the investigation said on Sunday, as police linked the suspect to a militant now in Syria. Salhi, 35, told detectives he had killed Hervé Cornara in a parking area before arriving at the plant in Saint Quentin-Fallavier, 20 miles south of Lyon, where he tried in vain to cause a major explosion. Examination of one of Salhi's mobile phones revealed that he had taken a picture of himself with the severed head and sent the image to a Canadian phone number. REUTERS

Brad and Angelina take tea with William and Kate

In dream team meet-up land, Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie got a special treat while in the U.K. that would make any anglophile seethe with jealousy. The couple had tea with Prince William and Kate Middleton, according to Us Weekly. Not too shabby. Or would it be more accurate to say the royals were lucky enough to have tea with Brangelina? It could honestly go either way. "The Duke and Duchess of Cambridge met with Brad Pitt and Angelina Jolie at Kensington Palace on Friday afternoon," a palace spokesman says. "They discussed their shared interest in combating the illegal wildlife trade." Way to kill the mood, guys. Did Kate at least get her "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" DVD signed?

Watch the throne, Jay Z. Or more specifically, watch as you and Beyonce have to evacuate it to make room for Taylor Swift and Calvin Harris, who took the top spot as a couple on Forbes magazine's Celebrity 100 list, even though they've only been together for a few months. Swift and Harris' combined annual incomes total an impressive $146 million. But Jay and Bey, bumped to No. 2, can at least console themselves with their combined $110.5 million annual take. Who needs silly lists, anyway?

Kanye West has a new feud with ... David Crosby?

This one I did not see coming. While Kanye West was busy covering Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody" and calling himself the "greatest living rock star" at Glastonbury this weekend,' '60s folk icon David Crosby was airing his dislike for North's papa. "Kanye West can't write, sing or play, so I have trouble with him as anything but a poser," Crosby said in a HuffPost Live chat. When his interviewer countered that West can produce, Crosby doubled down: "Produce? That means he sits in a chair while the engineer does the work," he said. "He's a poser. I'm not backing off." Clearly.

Bang Bang. Celebrity tattoo artist Keith McCurdy talks being friends with Rihanna and how she changed his life.

Ink like Rihanna

Keith McCurdy is based in New York City's Lower East Side. / MWN

Keith McCurdy has left his indelible mark on a lot of A-listers — Miley Cyrus, Cara Delevingne, Justin Bieber and Katy Perry are just a few. But the tattoo artist known as Bang Bang — a nickname he owes to a pair of revolvers on his neck — first inked his way to fame with Rihanna, when he was just 19. McCurdy, whose tattoo parlor is based in New York's Lower East Side, chats candidly about life behind the needle.

How did you start working with Rihanna?
I started tattooing Rihanna when she was 18. I was 19 — it was quite a long time ago. I asked her about it recently, and her story is different from mine, but the way that I remember it was she had to come in to my tattoo shop to get a nipple piercing. She had asked a piercer friend of mine — his name is Joe Snake — who was the best tattoo artist around, and he told her it was me. I met her, we clicked really well, and I tattooed her the next day. I also tattooed her best friend Melissa [Forde] the same day. I've really never stopped tattooing them. We are tight.

Which one of her tattoos is the most special to you?
I think it's the first one, the Sanskrit prayer I did on her hip. It's special because I met one of the most influential people in my life when I did that. Doing that tattoo on her, becoming her friend, continuing to tattoo her over the years — it really changed my life.

What do you guys talk about when you tattoo her?
You know, we are friends so we talk about a lot of things, none of which are what the paparazzi or the news talk about. We never talk about anything like that. It's more like where we want to go clubbing!

Have you made Rihanna scream in pain?
She is a thug! I have put Rihanna through extreme pain. I've even made her cry before, but she never quit; she never passed out. Tattoos hurt, you know!

Have you ever been asked to copy one of Rihanna's tattoos?

Yes, I get asked to copy her tattoos all the time, but I won't do it. I'll happily do something with a similar style, but I won't do the exact same one. I don't work at McDonald's; I'm not making burgers. I'm making tattoos for people, so I'd rather design your own tattoo for you.

Would you tattoo a Rihanna face if you were asked to?
Yeah! I think I'm going to do it at some point. I thought about doing one for free for her biggest fan.

ELODIE NOEL, MWN

One more thing

Can you tell us something about Rihanna that the general public doesn't already know?

She is very observant. Even if she is drinking, goofing off, laughing or partying, she pays close attention to people. She is very selective with the people she lets into her life.

Contest announcement. And the winner of #BeLikeRihanna is...

A close-up look at the mood board that won Camila Fernanda Aguilera the competition. / MWN

Metro may be your favorite local city paper, but we are part of a global brand with editions in cities all over the world. Readers from across the globe entered our #BeLikeRihanna contest, creating mood boards in hopes that theirs would be creative enough to win an all-expenses-paid trip to see RiRi in concert.

The results are finally in, and the winner is — drumroll — Camila Fernanda Aguilera from Santiago, Chile. The 26-year-old graphic designer created a mood board depicting Rihanna as a "strong Caribbean queen."

"Rihanna is a very resilient woman fighting for her dreams," Aguilera tells us. This will be the first time Aguilera will see her role model in the flesh. She says she's excited to travel to the U.S. and experience the concert with other Rihanna fans who admire the singer just as much as she does. Congratulations! METRO

Amanda Seyfried is not a jerk

Interview. The "Ted 2" actress is annoyed when people are amazed she's nice.

Amanda Seyfried got her start in comedies, namely with her breakthrough role in "Mean Girls." Still, when she did "Ted 2," her second film with Seth MacFarlane after last year's "A Million Ways to Die in the West," she found herself remembering how to be funny after being serious for so long.

It seems like improvising with Seth MacFarlane and Mark Wahlberg might be difficult. Did you have to do much riffing?
Not for me, because I ad-lib, but I don't improvise. I'm not great at improv-ing. My brain doesn't work that fast.

This is your second film with Seth MacFarlane. What was your first meeting like?
He was a little shy at first. I'm a little unfiltered, and I say things to get a reaction, sometimes, when I'm nervous. I definitely said one thing, and his ears perked up, and he said, "What?" I can't really say what it was. I always, unconsciously or consciously, try to disarm people a little bit. I feel like I'm always fighting a stereotype about actresses or people my age or if I'm trying to get a job.

What do people tend to assume about you?
I notice that people just assume I'm going to be an a—hole.

Really, an a—hole?
Because I'm famous. Do you know how many f—ing flight attendants have said to me, "You're actually really nice! I can't believe how nice you are!" Their expectations are just so low sometimes. Bummer.

One more thing

Eye of the beholder

Both in "A Million Ways to Die in the West" and "Ted 2," MacFarlane throws in jokes about your eyes. How do you react to him doing it twice now?
Yeah, they're pretty big. He's safe with me; he can make fun of me. He can basically say anything. I can't take myself too seriously. He wanted to make a Gollum joke, so why not? I guess it makes sense. [ed. There's a joke in "Ted 2" in which Seyfried's character is compared with someone who looks like Gollum.] I can say, the day we shot the Gollum stuff, that's my best friend dressed as Gollum. She's tiny like me.

HOW TO GET AHEAD

(M)Athlete

Ravens lineman and numbers genius John Urschel tells us why everyone should love math.

RAQUEL LANERI
RaquelLaneri
raquel.laneri@metro.us

John Urschel is best known as an offensive lineman for the Baltimore Ravens. But he's also a mathematics whiz who has published academic papers (his latest: "A Cascadic Multigrid Algorithm for Computing the Fiedler Vector of Graph Laplacians"!!!), taught college calculus (at alma mater Penn State) and presented research to the NSA.

In addition to teaching during the off-season, Urschel is now partnering with new startup Persado, figuring out how to use math to generate compelling ad copy. (So, he can add "Don Draper 2.0" to his résumé, too.)

We caught up with the OG mathlete and asked him why it's important for football players to know their times tables.

So, does math make you a better football player? Is there a connection between math and football?

Mainly the competitiveness. That strong competitive drive — "I'm going to beat you" — is the same when it comes to tackling a math problem — like, "I am going to solve this and get at this and be victorious."

Beyond that, the better you are at thinking quickly and efficiently, the better of a football player you're going to be. One of the most important components of being an athlete is being able to see something and make [the right] split-second decision. That requires great intelligence and fast-twitch brain muscles, which mathematics trains.

How did you fall in love with math?

Ever since I was a little kid, I always had this question of "why." Why is the world like this? Why are things like this? I always had this desire to understand the unknown, and math, man, it was this beautiful thing. I loved that mathematics was this elegant thing that we have constructed. It's this man-made thing that is used to describe this beautiful, complex world we live in.

You're involved with lots of STEM and education initiatives. Why is it so important for kids to get into math?

No matter what job you get into — whether it's writing, working at a PR firm or playing professional football — mathematics will serve you well. You will face problems throughout your life — problems that the great majority of the time you have never faced before. And all of a sudden, you'll need to take your experiences, the skills you have learned and the tools you have acquired and somehow apply them to this new thing.

This is what mathematics trains you for. And that's really what people face in their lives day in and day out. Yes, mathematical equations and factoring and the Pythagorean theorem — these are things you should know. But really, what math is, is training your brain how to think.

You are a football player and a mathematician. Most people can grasp the "football player" part, but what exactly does a "mathematician" do?

Being a mathematician, in essence, is just applying mathematics to the world we live in. And that's it. … It doesn't have to be a professor; it doesn't have to be in academia. It can be in government, working for the NSA; it can be in the private sector, such as with a company like Persado, which has mathematicians. I believe the 21st century — this is the century of the mathematician.

"I have this terrible balance in my life. The problem is I love football and I do football, and I love math and I do math. But then I don't want to do anything else, and I don't do anything else. But I like my life, so I guess it's not that bad!"

Other ways Urschel keeps his brain sharp

"Chess is good. Reading, though not directly math related, helps in general and helps with your intellectual curiosity, which ties back into mathematics. I would also recommend playing quantitative-related games where you have to think — adding games that involve thought and not just pure randomness."

Chocoholics rejoice: You can now learn to make your own chocolate from scratch. PROVIDED

New York's Institute of Culinary Education now lets you major in chocolate

New York's Institute of Culinary Education is opening the nation's first educational bean-to-bar chocolate lab, and it looks delicious.

The lab is just one of the delectable features in ICE's new, 74,000-square-foot Lower Manhattan facility, which also includes a "modernist" culinary technology lab and an indoor hydroponic farm.

But the school felt it was important to include a small-batch artisanal chocolate-making facility due to the explosion of bean-to-bar operations in the U.S. during the past 10 years.

"I once read an article where a chocolatier stated, 'The most important step in making chocolate is every step,'" says Michael Laiskonis, ICE's creative director, who is at the helm of the chocolate lab. "I'm excited to show pastry chefs who aren't chocolate makers how quantitative aspects of the process — roasting time and temperature, milling particle size, etc. — can affect the end flavor and to explore the best applications of every type of chocolate."

Do they take applications for taste testers, too? Raquel Laneri

Letters to the editor

With gay marriage decision, SCOTUS states the obvious

It's a testament to the laziness of people that so many are cheering SCOTUS' decision on gay marriage, when even the Supreme Court justices said it was, um, actually legalized in 1868 when Equal Protection was made federal law in the 14th Amendment. A hundred and five years to get the government to obey its own laws? If you call that "progress," then you need to raise your standards a bit.
SHAUNA ERLBAUM, VIA EMAIL

With its decision to support the legality of marriage equality, the Supreme Court deserves our gratitude for stating the obvious.
DAVID TERHUNE, VIA EMAIL

Necessary unions

If everyone reading the unconstitutional definition of marriage, and are reading it in these pages, had only two male or two female parents, none of you would ever have been be born. What a loss to humanity.
GORDON BROWN, VIA EMAIL

Unholy acts

On the same day, June 26, 2015, Muslims are charged with committing three separate criminal acts in France, Tunisia, and Kuwait. I wholeheartedly condemn these unIslamic acts, as they violate Islamic teachings on the sanctity of human life as mentioned in numerous places in the Quran (5:33; 6:152; 17:34). These attacks are even more heinous as this is the holy month of Ramadan. Prophet Muhammad helped mankind even more so during Ramadan than in any other time of the year.

Celtics' 'fireworks' are duds

One of the only ways media and fans were able to hold back laughter when the Celtics drafted Louisville guard Terry Rozier on an all-time reach at No. 16 overall last Thursday night was the idea that Celtics boss Danny Ainge had a blockbuster trade looming. That hasn't yet happened and on Saturday, MassLive.com reported that Celtics brass aren't optimistic that they can lure a free agent big man to Boston this summer. Jay King wrote that sources within the Celtics organization now don't believe it's possible to nab a Kevin Love, Marc Gasol, DeAndre Jordan or LaMarcus Aldridge in free agency. Teams can begin negotiating with free agents on Wednesday.

Bruins half-heartedly blow things up over odd weekend

NHL. The direction in which the Bruins' franchise is going in right now is entirely unclear.

No other team in the NHL made a bigger splash this past weekend at the draft than the Bruins, as they were the first team in the modern era with three straight draft picks in the first round, courtesy of some blockbuster moves. Now, with free agency beginning on Wednesday, Bruins fans have to be wondering what direction the team is headed for in 2015-16 and beyond.

The flurry of activity on Causeway Street actually started on Thursday as the team dealt forward Carl Soderberg (an impending free agent that they chose not to re-sign) to the Avalanche for a sixth-round draft pick in 2016. If they knew he wasn't coming back, why didn't they trade him last season when they could have received a bigger return?

That puzzling move was trumped the following day as Boston dealt promising young defenseman Dougie Hamilton to Calgary for three draft picks this season (15th, 45th and 52nd overall). Finally, a couple hours later the B's flipped winger Milan Lucic to Los Angeles for the 13th pick, backup goaltender Martin Jones and minor league defenseman Colin Miller.

Young blood

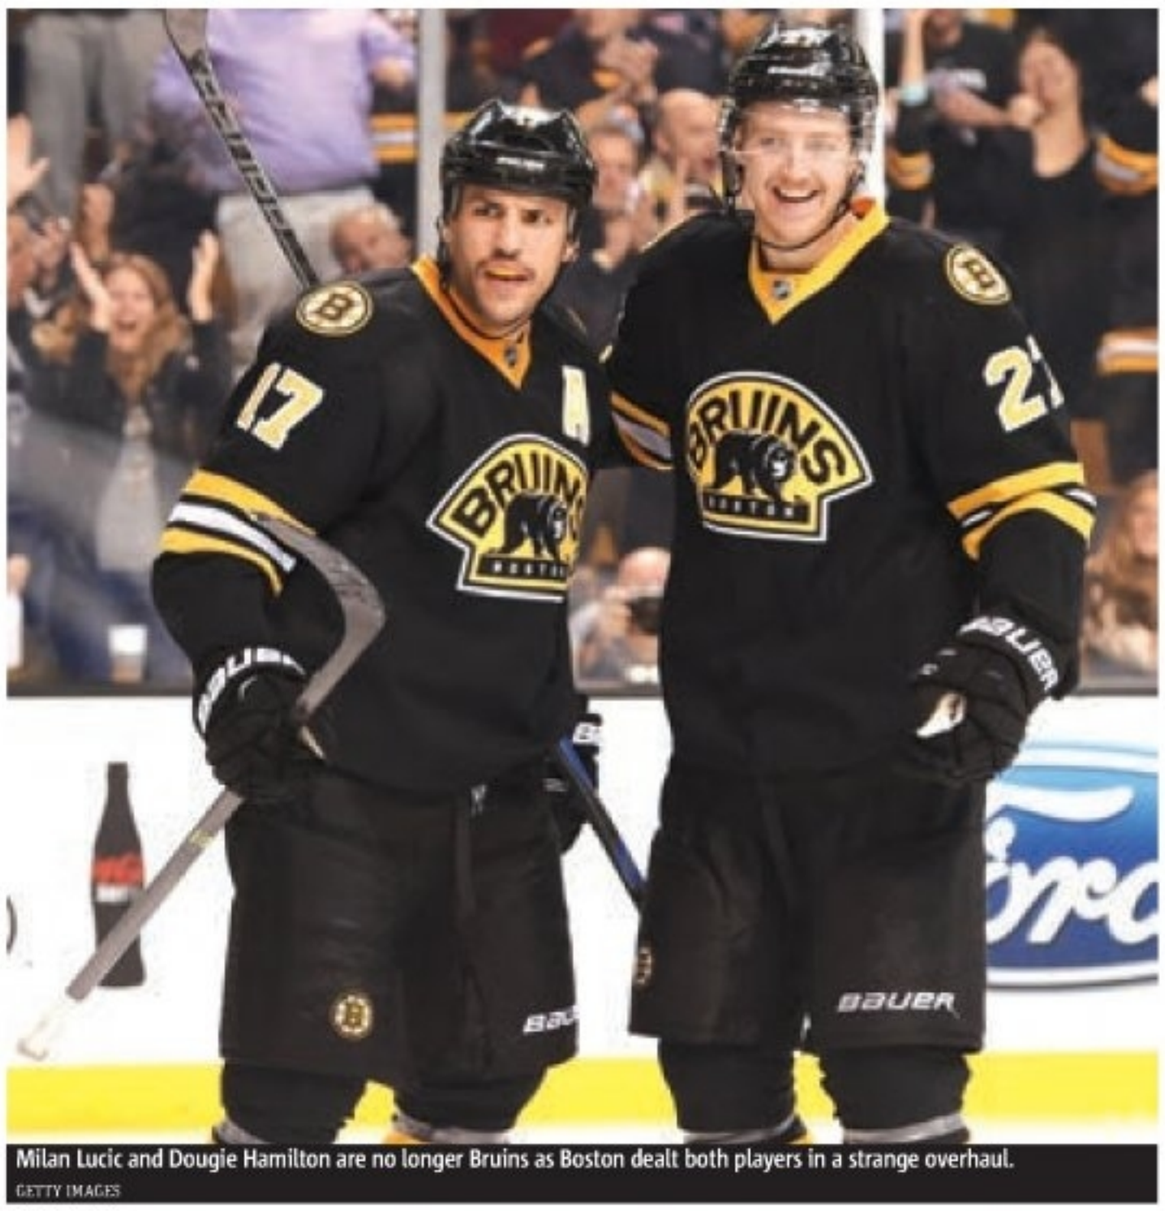
The three players the Bruins drafted in the first round of the NHL Entry Draft are all 18 years old. A look at the new Bruins:

- No. 13: Czech defenseman Jakub Zboril
- No. 14: Canadian forward Jake DeBrusk
- No. 15: Canadian forward Zachary Senyshyn

It's hard to accept that the Bruins are actually rebuilding when they still have cornerstone pieces like center Patrice Bergeron (who won his third Selke Trophy last week), goaltender Tuukka Rask and defenseman Zdeno Chara, among others, under contract. Plus, they brought back head coach Claude Julien. If they wanted a fresh start, why is he returning? Yes, the Bruins were hemmed in by the salary cap thanks to former GM Peter Chiarelli's mistakes, but then explain the rationale for signing injury-prone, bottom six defenseman Adam McQuaid to a four-year extension worth $11 million on Friday?

Julien was at the draft, along with Boston's front office personnel, and he came away supportive of new GM Don Sweeney's chaotic couple of days.

"I think that you've got to give Don a lot of credit," noted Julien, who figures to be on a short leash in 2015-16. "He's come into this role and there was a lot on his plate and there were some tough decisions to be made. Personally, I'm pretty impressed with how he's handled it. That's not to say I'm happy that Hamilton and Lucic are gone, we just lost two good players, but those are moves that probably had to be made, obviously with the situation that we're in with the cap and everything else in the future."



Milan Lucic and Dougie Hamilton are no longer Bruins as Boston dealt both players in a strange overhaul. GETTY IMAGES

Red Sox head north looking for rare win streak

The glass-half-full crowd will say that the Red Sox have won two of their last three series. The cynics will quickly point out that the Sox still have a brutal record of 34-43 and that they have won three games in a row over the same team just once this entire season. They put together a two-game win streak 10 days ago with a win at Atlanta and then at Kansas City, but stringing together wins has been an obvious issue.

The Sox will look for another rare two-game victory streak tonight in Toronto (7 p.m., NESN) when they play the 41-36 Blue Jays. Toronto is firmly in a heated AL East race, as is every other team in the division minus the Red Sox. The Jays sit just a game behind the first-place Rays, the team the Sox took two-of-three from this past weekend in St. Petersburg, Florida.

Boston used the long-ball to its advantage in a 5-3 Sunday win over the Rays as Pablo Sandoval, Alejandro De Aza and David Ortiz all went deep. It was especially impressive for the Sox considering they scored all five of their runs off of Tampa Bay pitching sensation, Chris Archer. Sox starter Justin Masterson actually outpitched Archer in the series finale, working five innings and allowing just one run on five hits.

Clay Buchholz (5-6) will take the ball for the Sox tonight against the Blue Jays. Toronto will counter with R.A. Dickey (3-7). MATT BURKE

Other than Mike Napoli's ejection for arguing a called third strike, the Red Sox had a fine Sunday in Florida. / GETTY IMAGES
